Thought for the Week

Travelling is a big part of many peoples lives today, and travelling has become so accessible for everyone. One of the most obvious changes that has occurred in air travel today is how we now travel with much less luggage.

It's with thanks to the policies of airlines that we have changed our behaviour in this one area of travel. Instead of checking in large suitcases, we now mostly travel with hand luggage, and yet this means we now have harder choices to make about what to take and what to leave behind. Perhaps the same is true concerning what we carry in our minds and our hearts also today.

The heart is that emotional part of us about what we feel, and the mind is about what we think. It's maybe worthwhile asking ourselves this coming week, what values, what inspirations, what memories and convictions are we carrying in the luggage of our hearts and minds right now, all that useful stuff and all that which is best left behind.

When we make this little reflection we might for example see the need to pack some gratitude and generosity into our lives, and leave complaining and selfishness behind. We might even find those painful hurts, those disappointments in life, the criticisms, the griefs and insults which can cling to us so heavily and weigh us down; how about deciding to leave much of that behind as well. And I have no doubt that all of us have experienced mercy and forgiveness at some time in our lives, should we not now carry the memory of that generosity with us, and now show that same mercy to others, and live at peace with our fellow passengers on this journey of life.

So may we over the week ahead, travel light, and pack the useful things, and leave behind what is dragging us down and therefore excess to requirements and may the peace of Christ stand guard over our hearts, and over our minds this week ahead.
